How the Boomerang Works.

The boomerang which the joyful the subject matter of the play may gathered from a recital of its in-lents. To a young physician comes a visitor is a real patient, brought by his mother, who cannot tell what alls him. But the physician, whose profession is to discover what alls his patients, soon detects symptoms of such jealousy as to be explicable as the cause of all his visitor's illness. Evidently the object of his patient's affection does not reciprocate. She is findeed interested in a certain other person. It is the doctor's theory that she should be made jealous and thus grow to return the love of the mas who has become ill on her account.

The prince secretly married Misself the prince secr

So he sends along the new nurse in order that she may act as the antidote and cause the indifferent beloved to grow jealous. All these incidents happen in the office of the young doctor. The prescription proves perfectly suited to the case. But it has a secondary effect which is not at all a part of the doctor's plans. He falls violently in love with the young woman who has done so much to make his patient unhappy. He is just as jealous of the young man in whom she takes an interest as his patient was. But he is less unhappy, since he succeeds, after hillities of $7.500 are represented by suits hillities at his wife's former home. It is said he tried to interest her family in a plan to prosecute an appeal from Mrs. O'Connell's judgment, believing he could upset the verdict, but they took kindly only to the suggestion that he go through bankruptcy.

In the bankruptcy petition, which was filed on the Prince's behalf by John Patterson, a lawyer of 43 Cedar street, the O'Connell judgment was the largest single liability listed. Contingent liabilities are represented by suits high the prince has attended social afferson him to the prince has attended social afferson him to the prince has attended social afferson him to have a him to prosecute an appeal from Mrs. O'Connell's judgment, believing he could upset the verdict, but they took kindly the prince has a him the unhappy, since he succeeds, after less unhappy, since he succeeds, after the sufferings that come from his own jealousy, in winning the young woman whom his patient loved. The patient, now cured, gets the nurse as his lot; so there is no ground for unhappiness on his part. The second act passes in the living room of this young woman's house

Full of the Spirit of Youth.

The usual first night audience, which included most of the theatre's celebrities not at present occupied in theatres of their own, took the greatest delight in the new comedy of Mr. Smith and Mr. Mapes. The play is in its present form too long for its content. But that did not interfere with the enjoyment the spectators.
